Looking at what history can teach us about a possible continuing pattern

"That men do not learn very much from the lessons of history is the most important of all the lessons of history." -- Aldous Huxley, 1959

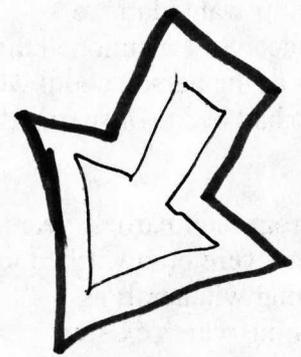

"Those who cannot learn from history are doomed to repeat it." --Santayana

By studying the ways and the patterns in which "misunderstood" and previously hated groups and members of groups have been treated by the official powers of yesteryear, we can better understand what may be happening to us in our various single-issue concerns, as well as in our study of a more macro-oriented understanding. And, once understanding, teach ourselves how to better deal with the bigoted and opportunistic mindsets and behaviors now being waged against us; perhaps even joining with some of these other groups who are being scapegoated or otherwise tooled as well, in an effort to deal ^{not} only with the more superficial/topical problems, but into the HEART of the matter! THAT would be taking some serious responsibility for the coming generations which we all claim to care about!

If we could get together as individuals challenging not other "enemies"--who're only people, similar to all of us--but stupid behaviors and irresponsible mindsets, imagine the sanity and inspiring excellence that could come from such!

Witch hysterias similar to today's hysterias?

"The inquisitions of the middle ages and the inquisitions of today were, and still are, to prevent democratic choice." -- J.W. Smith in Chapter 8 of ECONOMIC DEMOCRACY: The Political Struggle of the 21st Century.

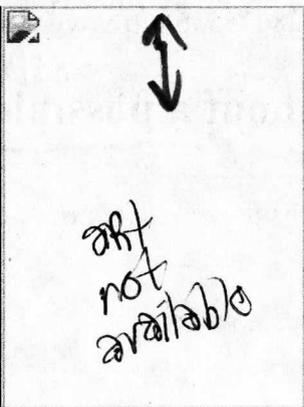

"...the great witch mania of the 16th century was a counter offensive directed by the Church against the people in an effort to maintain its authority and its privileges. Witches were merely so much expendable fuel used to kindle the passion for conformity in time of crisis." -- WITCH HUNT: The Revival of Heresy by Carey McWilliams, 1950; p.257

see Media Control speech, now a book & pdf (free) online

(could this 'crisis' be similar to the 'crisis' Noam Chomsky speaks of here when, around 1975, all sorts of hardly organized or completely unorganized groups began being brought forth all over the U.S. media as favored domestic "enemies"--"enemies" like drug users and child abusers and juvenile delinquents whom we were all told were going to destroy our way of life if their crazy behavior wasn't made war upon, right then, without spending any time to try to understand them in the way we were allowed to try to understand racism and sexism...?)

the greatest rural discontent prevailed." (see artwork illustrating this) p.258 in WITCH HUNT by Carey McWilliams.

Quotes from The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology by Russell Hope Robbins, 1959:

"[Witches were a] powerful subversive force, [according to the hype of those days;] working day and night to destroy true religion and to prevent the establishment of God's Kingdom... Witchcraft was treason against God..." p.5

Said one who was fully unprepared for this propaganda: "I was asked so often that I could not help seeing what people the inquisitor wanted me to denounce. So I mentioned the names of the person about whom people had been whispering." p.14

"...[F]rom their earliest years, children were brainwashed into accepting witchcraft as something which existed [without question]; and adults were terrorized into fearful silence and nervous conformity. Yet why should they not believe what their pastors and priests, judges and jurists, professors and theologians all told them was true? Would such leaders mislead?" p.15

the industry of witch hysteria
"...by the beginning of the 17th Century, witchcraft had developed into a vested interest and industry." p.15

"While providing a living for those connected with the [witch] trials, the property of the condemned witches also yielded extensive booty for whatever local authority had jurisdiction

Here's what Marvin Harris in Cows, Pigs, Wars and Witches: The Riddles of Culture says:

The witchcraft mania built upon existing lifestyle consciousness, but with totally different consequences, Harris claims. Where people were empowered to trust and love strangers (as in the 1960s and 70s movements), "witchcraft mania...dispersed and fragmented all the latent energies of protest. It demobilized the poor and the dispossessed, increased their social distance, filled them with mutual suspicions...isolated everyone..." p.239

(Sounds a lot like what happened during and after what Chomsky identified as Rollback when policymakers and planners felt threatened by the often heavily Left-influenced liberation movements of the 1960s/70s. So what are the "totally different consequences" spoken of above?--ed)

"The witch craze mysteriously started at a time when "third age" prophesies of Utopia and independent movements threatened the Church and its allies. p.234

"The witch-hunt system was too well designed, too enduring, too grim and stubborn. It could only have been sustained by interests that were equally enduring, grim and stubborn. (sounds like your average policy maker of such unaccountable institutions as the WTO and the Trilateral Commission to me--ed) The witchcraft system and the witch craze had practical and mundane uses apart from the stated goals of the witch hunters...confiscation of property and fees charged for [specialist work were] rewards [that] help explain why the technicians of the witch hunt went about their work with lively enthusiasm." p.236 (note: such confiscation has continued to be routine especially in 'zero tolerance' states for drug users, and to my knowledge, was sometimes used against persons called child rapists--ed)

"I suggest that the best way to understand the cause of the witch mania is to examine its earthly results rather than its [professed] intentions." p.237

"...[first,] old women and lower-class, [then] children of both sexes and men [were attacked]." 1,258 executions in Germany altogether. Inquisitors themselves and some members of clergy were also attacked, but doctors, lawyers and university professors were "seldom threatened" and "as the flames licked closer to [society's powerful policy and decision makers], judges lost confidence...and panics ceased." p.238

(Food for thought? How does today's hysteria against illegal drug users and other groups like pedophiles compare with yesterday's social hysteria against witches? The times were much different, but I see that the underlying current and method of attack hasn't really changed, except cosmetically. The poor are still powerless, disobedient kids still

"...the clergy led the persecutions and condoned them in the name of Christianity, while the lawyers and judges and professors abetted them in the name of reason."
p.17

Warfare kills all in its path (as if this was anything new)

Quoting an eye-witness of the time:

"The victims of the funeral pyres are for the most part male witches. Half the city must be implicated; for already professors, law students, pastors, canons, vicars, and monks have been arrested and burned..."

"Students and boys of noble birth [(surely also of peasant birth--ed)], of nine, ten, eleven, twelve, 13, and 14 years of age have been burned. To sum up, things are in such a pitiful state, that one does not know with [whom] the people one may talk and associate." p.16

"Protectors" as "conscience" leaders "Throughout these centuries [of witch persecution], those who "should," by their birth, training, and position, have been the conscience of the world, accepted the delusion and promoted it." p.17

"The logic of the demonologists, all highly educated men, leaders in their own disciplines, is the most terrifying feature of [the hysteria]. ...[T]urning rational thinking on its head--[was] far [worse] than the most foul act of a torturer or witch judge..." p.17 demonized or psychiatrically labeled without context, and the rich still able to largely buy more justice (as we see in any comparison of length of prison terms meted out by highly propagandized judges and juries). There are only isolated instances of media focus on highly placed individuals, and those are people who really are not seriously a part of centralized power structures: i.e. Allen Ginsberg, Arthur C. Clarke, and Michael Jackson, and the Catholic priests.)

* This was documented in the 1980s in either Mitzel's Boston sex scandal or D. Thorstad's A Witch-hunt foiled. Was also ~~and~~ brought up in 'PAN' magazine. That is, homes & stuff of the accused &/or convicted could be confiscated by investigators & their agencies. For example, I recall someone named Swithenbank losing his boat & other valuables.

Today all underage sex is labeled 'abuse' &/or 'Rape', regardless of consensuality. And people are labeled 'pedophiles' even though love of teenagers is technically called 'hebephile'. Even NPR's allegedly more conscious mediators uncritically use 'pedophile' to label teen 'abusers' like R. Kelly or Epstein. In hysteria, no one gets to know whether there was actual abuse or Rape due to these sneaky legal terms.

(Absolute Truth in science, same as dogma in religion)
(next section, see website)

~~which is a deliberate strategy~~

"The sexuality of almost every person in our society has been thoroughly repressed and deformed since birth. Each of us has learned to cope (however dysfunctionally) with this fact in our own ways--usually by deeply burying the feelings we experienced... We have been forced to bury these feelings and rationalize this extremely repressed (and thus often explosively felt) sexuality to ourselves. Because we have had our sexuality crippled in this way it is understandably hard for us to consciously examine the effects this all-pervasive social history has had on our thoughts, feelings and children's sexuality raises such an emotional reaction in most people." --Lev, in reply to "Vexed to Hell", Issue #23
