FPS (Ann Arbor Youth Liberation) Together with Chicago's CHIPS (a youth-run press), FPS became the longest-running national voice of independent young people, including voices from pre-teens. Very rare, but may be found via university internet libraries (i.e. Labadie Collection at U of Mich. Hatcher Library). A must-read!

requiring help from others, not dependent upon the community. The parents have responsibility for the total care of the children, care which once was distributed among several adults in an extended family. The children do little for the family and almost nothing for each other or for themselves. Already-overburdened parents continue to increase their sense of responsibility and their feeling of guilt over these responsibilities as society's expectations of what families should offer their children rise. Nevertheless, the popularity of the nuclear family as the ideal continues in spite of the accelerating difficulties.

"Before the advent of the nuclear family, parents could rely on the whole community in which they lived to help rear their children. But now the situation has become so particularized that adults will not let others touch their children. We fear that there is something perverse or meddling about those in our community who do." In contrast to this, other cultures depend upon communal care and as a consequence parents are relieved of the responsibility for constant supervision and attention that must ordinarily be given to children.

Not the least of the changes which make childhood so different today has to do with the changing balance of education and information for adults and children, a balance shifting now to children. For the first time in history, we may be experiencing a reversal in the transmission of culture, with the young teaching the old. Now, for the first time, youth is truly on the leading edge of our society. Although they are less experienced, they are better educated and even better informed. Older people still have a great deal to teach young people, but the amount that young people can now teach adults is greater than ever. Except being in touch with intuition.

One of the most serious consequences of our limited view of children and of our segregation of them is that we may be subverting their capacity for genius. It has been pointed out that we no longer have infant and child prodigies, or that at least they are now much rarer than before. In medieval times when children were an integral part of the community, they did show great genius. Louis XIII performed all sorts of remarkable feats by the age of two. He played the violin at seventeen months and played tennis when he still slept in a cradle. He was an archer and played cards and chess at six. Today we might worry a bit about precocity of that magnitude. Then, people took it for granted. They accepted it as a gift that anyone might have, but didn't associate the remarkable achievements with age. social sci career-wanting made that appear along

Child prodigies began to disappear in the eighteenth century. We sacrificed genius for our present interest in homogeneity. We began to dislike precocity in children and to dislike children themselves. Our insistence on uniformity began the modern oppression of children.

Quotes from BIRTHRIGHTS by Richard Farson

Pages 8-11

"To say that [kids' liberation] is everybody's revolution because we were all once [kids] is not sufficient to justify adult participation in it...Indeed, adults are for the most part the child's political enemy. [Kids] should be making their own case. ...But children are so oppressed and incapacitated that it is not at all likely that they will be able to act on their own behalf, at least not until they develop greater strength and vision as a group. Shulamith Firestone argues for feminist involvement in the struggle for children's rights because of women's long period of related sufferings with [kids] and because, "There are no children yet able to write their own books, tell their own story."

Handwritten notes: "Ah, but weren't they doing it ideologically? Re: via communist ideology."

Curiously, this book was published 5 years AFTER Ann Arbor Youth Liberation started (1970), so there WERE kids writing their own stuff and telling their own story! Curious that the author somehow missed them???

"Child advocates now fall into two obviously related groups whose goals both overlap and conflict: On the one hand there are those who are interested in [restrictively] protecting [helpless] children, and on the other, those who are interested in [enrichingly] protecting children's [humanity via their] 'rights'. [My NOTE: another hand would be those who seek to fully liberate kids, beyond superficial 'rights'; such as anarchists.]

Handwritten notes: "(...)" and "femi- (men & womyn)"

"[People like] Rousseau thru John Dewey and more recently Paul Goodman, Carl Rogers, A.S. Neill, and Wilhelm Reich." [And even more recent, John Holt ("Escape From Childhood"), Grace Llewellyn ["The Teenage Liberation Handbook"], and Matt Groening ("Childhood Is Hell")]

Handwritten notes: "[are folks who champion forms of kids' liberation]."

"[North] America has a long tradition of people helping oppressed groups to which they do not belong, even when they themselves are regarded as oppressors. Whites were active in the emancipation of Blacks. Men have been helpful in reducing the oppression of women. So it is that adults are working to help children."

"The greatest resistance to the prospect of children's liberation will predictably come from those who are closest to the problem: parents, teachers, and children themselves. Parents respond, "My children are liberated enough"; "Children can't have it both ways, can't be equal to me and expect me to keep on working to support them." "As far as I'm concerned children already have too much power." If that sounds familiar it is because one could substitute "women" or "wife" for "children" and have the very same responses made by husbands to the prospect of women's liberation. The early days of that movement were characterized by suggestions that women were already dominating, too powerful, and already in control of all the money and resources. Derision and ridicule always come from the groups where interdependence is greatest."

Handwritten notes: "yes, now that dude spirit defenders are largely marginalized."

We can predict that [kids] will be their own worst enemies in the movement for their liberation.

TODAY'S YOUTH LIBERATION IN ACTION:

- Youthspeak--this one has LOTS of powerful links as well as a very active newsgroup and info about how you can get involved in such projects as working to lower the voting age. (Think it can't be done? In the 1970s young people lowered it from 21 to 18 which helped stop their adults from forcing "incapable youths" to fight their illegal wars (like the Vietnam one))
- Peace Fire--they challenge the Internet's "Blue Ribbon Campaign," saying that this 1st ammendment group discriminates against the young. (NOTE: find info on this from YOUTHSPEAK also if link doesn't work)
- K.R.A.T.Z.A. "I'm Martin Wilke, from a Berlin [Germany] children's rights group, called KRÄTZÄ. We are against age-restrictions and compulsory school." Note: You can read their page in German, Spanish, English and even esperanto!

Some Cases

Most people simply don't know how aggressively the government is prosecuting young children and teenagers for innocent or consensual sexual play. However, consider the following two news accounts from the past few years. In reading them, please note that the term "assault" does not mean here "attack," as it does in ordinary English. Here it is used as a legal term that means some kind of sexual touching took place with a person under the age of sexual consent.

- "Twenty-eight Maryland kindergarten students were suspended during the [2005]-06 school year for sex offenses, including sexual assault, sexual harassment and sexual activity, according to state data. Fifteen of the suspensions were for sexual harassment."⁴
- In just one county in Wisconsin, more than a dozen pairs of teenagers, including same-age couples, were charged with sexually "assaulting" each other in 2003.⁵

The background report, Cases of Persecuted Juvenile Sexual Activity, provides brief descriptions of 66 cases of children and teenagers, from four to 19 years of age, who were either formally admonished by their schools or criminally prosecuted as a result of innocent or consensual sexual acts. Each case is documented by at least one reference to reputable news reports and/or court documents.

Go to the listing of information on 66 cases.

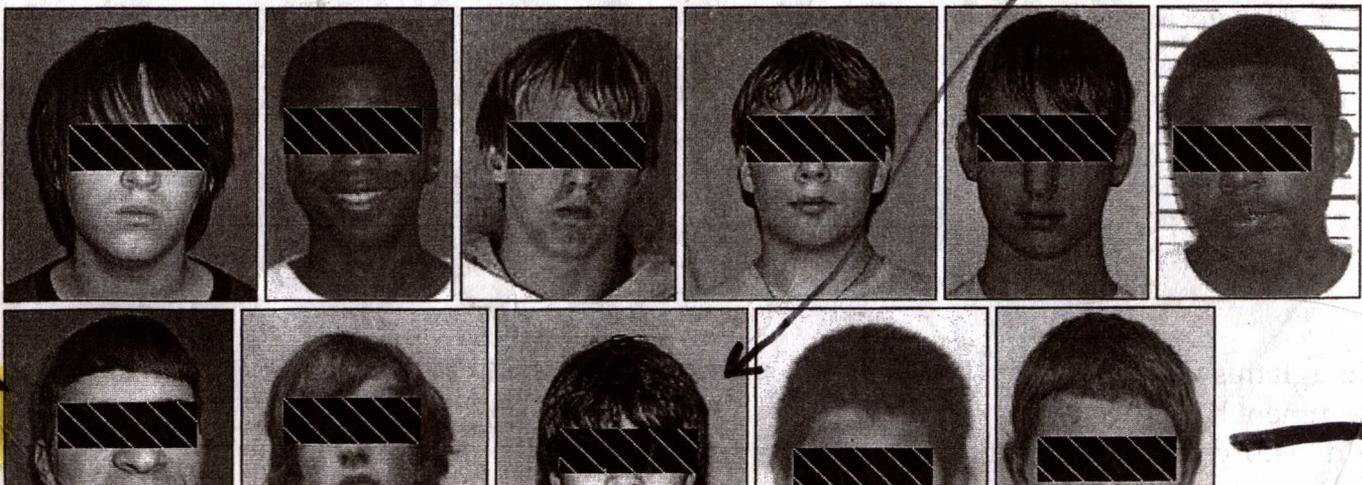

(link) more recent info can be found, also, including prosecution for sending nude photos of kids' selves to peers.

Meet the Sex Offenders

This section attempts to break through the dry statistics and legal case information above to put a human face on this subject. Below is a small collection of photographs of youngsters obtained from the registries of three states. The eyes were not blocked in the original photographs downloaded from the Internet. While it is possible that some of the youthful smiles shown here are masking violent rapists who brutally molested young children in their communities, we simply don't have enough information to know. None of the registries give us the information to distinguish between the sexually violent and those who engaged only in consensual activity with other kids. From the example cases given above, we know there are a lot of the latter on the registries.

So, without further ado, we present a small selection of America's estimated 19,000 juvenile sex offenders.
